Efficacy: Making a Difference for Our Students

We are pleased to release the February 2008 issue of Changing Perspectives: Efficacy: Making a Difference for Our Students. Efficacy means knowing that one has the capacity to make a difference and is willing and able to do so. The research suggests that individuals and school teams that are confident and feel competent in their ability to work with students from a wide range of backgrounds can close the gap in student achievement. We offer ideas from the perspectives of school teams, including principals, teachers and students, along with the voices from research and a parent advocacy group. All the articles, dialogues and book reviews in this issue focus on efficacy – making a difference for our students – as an important foundation for the work we are doing in our schools.

Featured Writers Include: Susan Drake, Andy Hargreaves and Ben Levin, Annie Kidder, Ken Leithwood, Jay McTighe and Elliott Seif

Along With: Classroom, School, District and System Leaders

Issue Also Includes: Insert with Activities Designed to Support Teams Building Efficacy at the School or District Level
